Bio

Jennifer Reid Egbe is no stranger to breaking down barriers. She was one of the first attorneys in her family and the first African American female at Huie to make partner. While her persistence and unrelenting stamina have served her well in her career, it has served her clients even better.

Since joining the firm in 2007, Jennifer has earned the respect, loyalty and trust of those she stands up for every day. And, she has earned a trial record that strikes fear into anyone who stands against them. Specializing in the areas of automotive product liability, personal injury, medical malpractice, employment discrimination defense and general insurance defense, Jennifer has served on trial teams that have multiple defense verdicts and summary judgment phase dismissals. Jennifer's practice has since expanded to include environmental litigation, consumer litigation, civil rights litigation, municipal litigation, heavy equipment product liability, business litigation and medical device litigation defense. Throughout her career, Jennifer has represented auto manufacturers across the country, hospitals throughout the state and has defended disputes involving allegations of First Amendment violations, excessive force, discrimination, flooding and water channeling, asbestos, business dissolution and all varieties of wrongful death claims. Her litigation practice runs the spectrum from case initiation through the appellate phase, and she is most in her element when strategizing, problem-solving and persuading under pressure. Jennifer represents a wide array of entities, from global Fortune 500 corporations to municipalities to local start-up businesses and tackles each client's cases with the same intensity, fortitude and efficacy.

Away from the office, Jennifer is involved in a number of service initiatives with local schools, law schools across the state and in the community, and she always welcomes any opportunity to speak with
