Bio

Bret Thompson knew at an early age that he would one day practice law in Birmingham, the city in which he was born and raised. While growing up, he saw his parents serve the community through their professional careers, and he aspired to follow in their footsteps. As an attorney, he is now able to help clients within the local community and throughout the U.S. evaluate and resolve their legal problems. Bret is committed to working tirelessly to advocate for his clients.

Prior to joining Huie in April 2021, Bret practiced for four years at a Southeast regional firm in their general commercial litigation and torts, insurance and product liability groups. Now, Bret focuses his growing practice in the areas of product liability, transportation law and insurance coverage and defense. In his career, Bret has embraced the constantly changing laws and enjoys the challenge of researching new issues and educating other attorneys and his clients. Even as a law student, Bret knew the importance of contributing to the greater legal community. He was a member of the Cumberland Law Review, a periodical devoted to legal issues that can be of use practitioners, teachers, legislators and students.

Away from the office, Bret enjoys spending time with his wife, playing with his two rescue dogs, traveling around the world and fishing at the lake.

Bret earned his BA in History from Birmingham-Southern College and his JD from Cumberland School of Law at Samford University.
